

BRUTE FORCE COMMITTEE

BEING A TOTALLY FICTIGIOUS AND IMAGINARY ORGANIZATION WHICH DOES NOT EXIST, HAS NEVER EXISTED, AND NEVER WILL EXIST...

To: Whom It May Concern
From: Mario Baker
Re: Queen's Grease Pole Liberation 2015

Early in the morning of September 13th, 2015, the engineering students from Queen's lost their grip on their famed slippery mascot. The one (and hopefully only) Queen's Grease Pole (formerly a U of T Varsity football upright from the 1950's) has once again been liberated by a group of anonymous Skuligans.

The liberators successfully located the pole following its appearance in the pole-climbing ceremony. Upon finding the pole neglected and unguarded, they felt sympathetic and were compelled to bring it to a better home. The students executed the liberation intent on continuing the friendly rivalry between engineering schools across Canada. The operation was executed in adherence to the ESSCO pranker's code, and will include the return of the Grease Pole to Queen's in a timely manner. In order to maintain anonymity and ensure the safekeeping they have entrusted the Grease Pole to us, Da Brute Force Committee.

On behalf of Da' BFC, I, Mario Baker, welcome this sizable new addition to our collection of recent mascot liberations. Stay tuned for further details and our list of demands in the near future.

For any inquiries, please contact Mario Baker at mb@mariosbakery.ca.

DA'CHIEF

Mario Baker
Newark, New Jersey

PS: The liberators would advise future models of the Grease Pole be made of aluminum as the current one is "extremely fucking heavy".